MONTANA/THE WEST

there is little to gain from the reception.

"I would sort of put it into the category of online political pranks," said Noble of PoliticsOnline. "I can understand why people do it, but it is a little juvenile to tell you the truth."

McCulloch is not alone in Montana. Republican Bob Keenan is considering a run against incumbent Democratic U.S. Sen. Max Baucus, but he won't be able to use www.3obKeenan.com if he enters the race. The state Democratic party owns the site, which asks, "Where do they find these candidates?"

Jim Farrell, who as execu-

Coalition, said he believes using the names on the Internet for political speech is protected activity. The group defends the free use of domain names by those who register them first, even if they use or include trademarked names.

The names "are merely addresses to space on the Internet," Barry said, adding the public can tell when a Web site is not owned by the person.

"Voters are smart enough to understand that a site attacking a candidate is not likely endorsed by that candidate," Barry said.
